

Institutional Influence on Development Aid Effectiveness: Local Agri-food System in Malawi and Burundi

Friday, 8 March 2024 10:00 (15 minutes)

Despite decades of cooperation efforts, many countries have not yet achieved the expected levels and impact on development. A poor articulation between the local institutional framework and development aid can be a determining factor in the inefficiency of aid. The aim of this research is to investigate the challenges surrounding the articulation between local institutional frameworks and development aid, with a particular emphasis on the agri-food sector, to clarify the underlying reasons for its low effectiveness and propose strategies for improved outcomes.
